

On Monday the Envirokids went on an adventurous walk to see the beauty of Hakanoa Lake. First we walked to the Lake View Terrace entrance, on the way there some people picked up rubbish, being tidy kiwis. We started walking down the gravel path; we then spotted the genesis energy garden. We walked a bit further to reach the green shelter and waited for the rest to catch up. We continued walking until we came to the global gardens; the New Zealand garden had the most plants. We stopped for a break to eat our snack, before we entered the swap like path toward the construction of the Japanese garden which had a mini duplicate of Mount Fuji, we can't wait for it to be finished. We came out to the Huntly Domain, and walked back to the Lake View Terrace entrance and walked back to school just in time for Morning Tea. People brought their cameras and we have lots of great photos of our walk.
